1.2 Summary of the Action

Angola is endowed with 1 650 km of coast benefitting from a diverse and highly productive marine life that generates 2.7% of its Gross National Income (GNP) and 23% of its exports (excluding oil and diamonds) and supports 150 000 jobs in fishing activities only. 'Fisheries' are central to the Government's aspiration to diversify the economy and promote decent jobs for all. The sector is the third priority among the identified value chains to be supported for these purposes.

The promotion of the blue economy is at the junction of the national strategy for the sea and the strategy to diversify the economy. Support to the sector will allow Angola to manage sustainably its marine and fresh water biological resources, increase climate change adaptation and mitigation, generate economic activity and wealth, create new decent jobs in particular for youth and women, improve health and nutrition by providing affordable, nutritious and healthy proteins and fatty acids, increase the revenue collected from the export of seafood products, and strengthen its integration into regional (preserved and fresh fish) and international (high value frozen seafood products) markets.
